Eliza Knight!

Eliza wrote this year's hot book Lost in the Summer of '69, and the Confessions of a Grammar Queen set in 1963. She is known for her historical fiction and romance fiction novel series set in 15th century to 19th century Europe.

Eliza is the creator of the popular historical blog History Undressed, and host on the History, Books and Wine podcast. She has an MFA in Creative Writing from Drexel University. Her books have been translated into multiple languages, and, most recently, her co-authored title A Day of Fire has been optioned for television. She lives in the Tampa Bay area with her husband and three daughters, one of whom is a new Chi Omega sister at USF Tampa.

She also writes contemporary women's fiction novels under the pseudonym Michelle Brandon. Her 2025 drama-packed novel Rush Week is about four sorority sisters from the University of Alabama who reunite for Rush Week, only to find that their past secrets are about to be exposed.
